"You can tell the condition of a Nation by looking at the status of its Women."
Pt. Jawaharlal Nehru

After decades of "freedom", it is a disgrace to witness the girl child coping to survive, let alone, treated as unequal in our modernistic, advancing 21st century society. There are several homes across the country where harmful customs of the ancient world coexist with modern appliances and thought. It may come as a surprise that the dichotomy between thought and action prevails in most of the "educated and learned" households, be it giving special treatment to boys over girls or applying certain rules and regulations on girls over boys. Our school has always supported the cause of "Women empowerment". To spread this message in the society, the school management, teachers and students joined forces to come out with a programme which would capture every person's thought and imagination and make him/ her part of the fight against the invisible obsolete traditions, detrimental social norms, useless customs and rituals which have ostentatiously spun a web around women of today.

"Chakravyuh- The Invisible Web" presented the journey of a girl child from the time she is identified, often with dismay and hatred, to the time she comes into this world, only to be given a restricted life of predetermined duties and fate, where choice and privileges can't be voiced. The show began with an ode to the three forms of Nari Shakti- Goddess Durga, Goddess Laxmi and Goddess Saraswati. Soneera Tiwari of Grade III led the audience to the story of a girl child in today's society. She spoke how the innocent "Gudiya Rani" is forced to give up her hopes and dreams to meet the expectations of her parents and the society.

The show later showcased the daily struggles of a girl child which we even do not realise. The boxed up dreams and aspirations were given vent in the end when the girl child broke all myths and limits to live a life with the "Jazbaa" to flourish and transform. It ended on a high note by showing women reaching the "Hall of Fame" for their contributions to various fields and professions.

The show touched an emotional chord of the audience who left with teary eyes but broadened perspectives. It may well be understood that the fight is not against men as such. The woman of 21st century has learnt to assert herself and take her due and not only to ask for her rights. These shackles are breaking and women are marching forward to redraw their role along with the roles of others. We are thankful to all those who appreciated our efforts and hope to bring many more life changing, thought provoking concepts.
